questered by a growth of elders on one side and thick trees on the other, so that it is a most delightful spot for the sport, free, as they believed, from prying eyes and far from the ears of any-one not in their secret. It is the cus-tom of the young women to array themselves in bathing costume at home, then with a loose-fitting gown as a covering they hurry to the pool, there to dive and splash like naiads. A young man named Raker, who lives in the neighborhood, learned of their evening neighborhood, learned of their evening gambols and decided to employ himself in the pastime of peeper. From the limb of a tree about six feet above ground he was afforded an excellent opportunity to see the full scope of the pool in which the girls bathed, and on this he mounted himself a half-hour before the bathers came.

But they had hardly gotten into the water when a belated member of the girls' party, while passing the tree, caught sight of the face of the eager Raker as it peeped from among the bangles. She didn't shriek, nor faint, but walked on as if nothing unusual nad occurred. At the pool she quietly explained her discovery to the four other girls. Without donning unnecessary kirts the girls made a rush for OIL STOVES.
